To the PUBLICK. London, Jan. 1, 1750.

WHOEVER conſiders the Task of ſelecting from Hiſtory a Series of Subjects proper for ſuch a Deſign as the preſent, will eaſily perceive that many Difficulties muſt attend it. There are ſome important Events and remarkable Periods of Hiſtory, which will not afford any Subject for the Painter: As on the other Hand, ſome Actions and Occurrences, that would make very agreeable Pictures, are not of Importance enough in the Hiſtory to merit a Place in ſuch a Series of Prints. Some Subjects muſt likewiſe be avoided, becauſe of their Similitude in Painting to others. All Battles, for Inſtance, are very much alike, except ſuch as afford ſome ſtriking Object for a principal Figure; as Harold in the Battle of Haſtings, pierced through the Head with an Arrow, and falling from his Horſe. The frequent Beheadings alſo of great and eminent Men which occur in our Hiſtory, can very few of them be taken, for the ſame Reaſon. However, in ſo large a Tract of Time there is no Doubt but that the Hiſtory of England will afford to the Painter a ſufficient Number of Subjects, various in their Nature, ſtriking in their Circumſtances, and important to the Hiſtory. Thoſe which are here laid before the Publick have been ſelected from our Hiſtorians with ſome Care, in regard to all theſe Points; yet they are not ſo fixed upon, but that the Proprietors will be very much obliged to ſuch Gentlemen of Taſte and Knowledge as will give themſelves the Trouble of conſidering this Deſign and favour them with their Objections and Remarks, or propoſe the changing any particular Subject for a better.

A LIST of the FIFTY SUBJECTS propoſed.

1 THE Landing of Julius Cæſar.
